

Hydrologic Components

Flow from upstream lakes, evaporation and precipitation influence lake levels. This graph illustrates the relative influence of each of those factors on the Great Lakes system. Values are based on a monthly average and are represented as thousand cubic feet per second. Note that the net amount of water diverted into the Great Lakes is greater than the amount diverted out.

